Love & Home

Homemakers put time and intention into their work. When one takes the time to make items by hand, creation takes precedence over consumerism. Shifting the focus from the overarching consumer culture, to one that honors the process of creating results in cherished family heirlooms. This gives them greater intrinsic value than their store bought mass produced counterparts.

The art we create takes on some of our being, sharing ourselves when we are not there. The process of making rather than purchasing creates even more value through the act of passing down and sharing of these skills with family and in turn the community.

The Gathering Resonance Collective wishes to share your art, your craft, your items for the home created with intention and love in our community space.
